

BRETT MACDONALD is passionate about bringing people together. She is an educator and workshop facilitator. Her work, rooted in improv, brings teams together to connect, collaborate and drive workplace performance. Working with community-minded organizations, Brett leads corporate team building, uniting employees and executives alike, all with an improv mindset, an approach proven to boost creativity, communication, and collaboration.

BRETT'S METHOD merges her experience in education and the arts. Through laughter and the power of play, workshops offer an opportunity to shape – or reshape – essential business skills, comradery and culture.

Brett holds a Bachelor of Education, a Diploma in Theater, and is trained in Harvard's Project Zero Visible Thinking Routines, Inquiry Based Learning, Differentiated Learning, as well as Self-Compassion and Mindfulness. She has taught internationally and facilitated professional workshops for The Association of German International Schools (AGIS) and The Educational Collaborative for International Schools (ECIS). She has been training, performing, and teaching improv for over a decade, cofounding two improv groups, organizing shows, directing festivals and performing herself.

Most important to Brett is sharing the improv approach and allowing others to experience the value of connection.
